

Start His Day With A Zingy Breakfast

By Count Marco

What I am about to suggest will be welcomed gratefully by some women in this country just starting out on marriage, but others, the lazy, slovenly type who think that successful marriages happen without help, will scream, rave, rant and refuse to carry through.

But then I can't help all women, unfortunately. Some of you are bound by your own stubbornness to end your days on the discard pile. C'est la vie!

A woman should spend her entire first year of marriage establishing the habit pattern of setting a good table for breakfast. Just as a child has formative years, so does a marriage, and breakfast is when you form your best impression of each other.

This is the time of day when both of you are least tired, irritated, bothered by phones, doorbells and neighbors.

The breakfast table should be something he is glad to rush to instead of something to avoid. Very few of you American women ever take the time and thought to set an appealing table for his breakfast.

Far, far too many of you put a jar of instant coffee on the table, a coffee cup without a saucer next to it and then stagger back to bed.

I will, however, say this. I have heard many married men rate instant coffee as the greatest boon to marriage since the ducking stool. They say it gives them the chance to get out of the house faster and thus waste fewer minutes looking at the sights their spouses are in the early hours.

Get up and have a real breakfast with him. Set the table to look appetizing and attractive and include yourself in the clean-up campaign! Because you have risen before him, you can be preparing his breakfast while he is washing, shaving and combing his hair.

Let that breakfast be more than a tired piece of toast and a cup of coffee. Do as many Europeans do. Make it a grand meal for the day ahead.

Now don't be sneaky, as so many American women are, and ask him when he is still groggy from sleep, "What do you want to eat?"

Because he isn't fully awake, you naturally expect him to mutter, "Nothing. Just some coffee."

You turn over in bed, mumbling something about instant coffee being on the sink. Your kind ends her days holding a coffee jar, and that's about all.

So if you're planning marriage or just starting out, make a happy breakfast a habit and he'll make you a habit he'll never want to break.

Happy thought, isn't it?
